Cancer targeting drug delivery systems (DDSs) are normally required to achieve high levels of accumulation and substantial amounts of drugs in tumor tissues without compromising normal tissues. Targeting to tumor tissues with the aid of serum proteins is a novel approach in DDS technology. To achieve targeted delivery, an antagonist of transferrin (TF), copolymers of N-lactic-c-diamine-co-lysine (pCSA), was conjugated with the transferrin (TF)-targeted ligand 5-carboxy-20-sulfobenzoic acid (5-CSA) to form a conjugate. Its biological activity and tissue distribution were measured in a mouse animal model. It was found that the conjugate had a significant antitumor effect on BxPC-3 tumor-bearing mice, and achieved a homogeneous targeting to tumors, which was significantly better than the parent pCSA copolymer. It was also confirmed that both the anti-tumor activity and the targeting ability of the conjugate could be related to the TF affinity of 5-CSA. The novel transferrin-targeted copolymer-pCSA can be a useful novel DDS for tumor targeting.Risk factors for the development of mood, anxiety, and eating disorders in individuals with binge-eating disorder: a structured interview study. There are no good criteria for distinguishing true binge-eating disorder (BED) from other related eating disorders. The current study used the Yale Brown Obsessive Compulsive Scale (Y-BOCS) to investigate risk factors for the development of mood, anxiety, and/or eating disorders in patients with BED. A total of 226 patients with BED (68 with comorbid mood, anxiety, and/or eating disorders [comorbid group]) were compared to a control group of 233 individuals with only BED (healthy group). The groups were matched for gender, race, and age. Univariate and multivariate analysis were used to compare the groups. Univariate analyses revealed more
